Monday Resignation Announcement British Prime Minister

collected photo

Speculation is growing in British political circles that Prime Minister Keir Starmer could announce his resignation on Monday. British media reports suggest that he may also reveal a potential timeline for stepping down from office.

According to the reports, Starmer has been discussing his political future with close allies amid mounting political pressure and internal party unrest. However, a government source said that he remains focused on his duties and has not made any formal decision.

Questions over his leadership have been emerging within the Labour Party for several months. Discussions about a leadership change intensified following Andy Burnham's recent victory in a key party contest.

Although Starmer led Labour to a significant election victory in 2024, he has since faced declining public support over a range of policy and economic issues. Criticism of the government's handling of the cost-of-living crisis, public services, and immigration has also increased.

Party sources say that a significant number of Labour MPs have already expressed support for a change in leadership, adding to the political pressure on Starmer.

Greater Manchester Mayor Andy Burnham is widely viewed as the leading potential successor. While he has not officially entered any leadership race, his name is being mentioned more frequently than any other figure in discussions about the party's future leadership.

Meanwhile, Starmer has publicly stated that he is prepared to face any challenge to his leadership. Nevertheless, political observers are closely watching for any announcement he may make on Monday.