Iran's President Has Proposed a Ceasefire: Donald Trump

Donald Trump. Picture: collected

U.S. President Donald Trump has claimed that Iran's president has sent a ceasefire proposal to the United States. However, he made it clear that the U.S. will not consider any ceasefire unless the Strait of Hormuz is fully "open, secure, and functioning normally."

On Wednesday (April 1), Trump shared this claim in a post on his social media platform, Truth Social. In the post, he described Iran's current president as comparatively less aggressive and more pragmatic than previous leaders.

At the same time, issuing a strong warning, Trump said that U.S. military operations will continue unless the stated conditions are met. He also hinted that even tougher measures could be taken if necessary.

The Trump administration has consistently maintained that ensuring normal maritime navigation through the Strait of Hormuz is one of the key conditions for ending the conflict. However, in earlier statements, Trump had opposed a ceasefire and expressed confidence in U.S. military strength.