Iran Agrees Not to Pursue Nuclear Weapons: Trump

Donald Trump. photo: CNN

U.S. President Donald Trump has claimed that Iran has agreed to step away from its nuclear weapons program. He made the remarks during an interview on the “Pod Force One” podcast published on Wednesday (June 3).

Trump said the United States would never allow Iran to obtain nuclear weapons and claimed that Tehran had also agreed not to possess such arms. He described the issue as the most important aspect of the ongoing discussions.

During the interview, Trump also commented on Iran’s military capabilities. He claimed that Iran’s naval and air power had weakened and that the country’s military strength had declined compared to previous years. He further alleged that Iran’s economy is facing serious difficulties, with high inflation worsening the situation.

Responding to questions about tensions in the Strait of Hormuz and the possibility of a blockade, Trump said he does not believe the situation will last long. He expressed confidence that a resolution could come soon and added that the United States currently holds a strategic advantage regarding the Iran issue.

Speaking about Iran’s leadership, Trump said there has been growing discussion over the influence of Mojtaba Khamenei in major state decisions. He described it as part of Iran’s long-standing power structure.

Trump also claimed that communication with Iran’s top leadership remains positive and did not rule out the possibility of direct talks between the two sides if conditions become favorable in the future.